MOBISH MITZI—Aunt Sophia Reminds Them of Fall Coats

By JAY V. JAY

The girls have been talking about what the fall fashions are going to be, about how very stunning Mitzi's dress is with frills for the collar, extending all the way down the front, and about her large hat. Aunt Sophia says they have forgotten something very important—their coats!

No one should ever forget a coat—especially when it is new and handsome as Adelaide's. Adelaide clings to the straight line style that wraps about the hips. The collar crushes in folds and is of cloth. The trimming is in the weave of the material.

Polly has a new fall coat with the bolero effect. The collar is made of fine tucks. She wears a scarf of a contrasting color with it to match her hat. The sleeves are quite full and strapped in with narrow bands of the material. This is a coat nobody will forget.

Mitzi is rather resentful about putting on her cape coat. It is new to be sure. But her dress is newer. Aunt Sophia once in a while doesn't seem to understand—everything about fashions. If Mitzi forgot her coat it was on purpose. Of course, if the other girls are going to wear theirs, one has to be agreeable!

His talk followed the luncheon hour.

COMMISSION HEARS WITNESSES AT HOME IN EMPLOYE'S APPEAL

Members of the state civil service commission were expected to complete their investigation at the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, Tuesday afternoon, relative to the appeal by Charles Hoderlein to the commission for reinstatement as butcher at the Home.

No decision had been reached early Tuesday afternoon, and it is thought that it will be announced Wednesday from Columbus. Chairman Swisher and Mr. Bundy, of the state civil service board, conducted the investigation.

The commission members called on Thomas F. Andrews, superintendent of the Home who dismissed Hoderlein from his employ; Dr. A. H. Middleton, Home physician; O. T. Sheets, storekeeper and Jacob Marshall, Xenia, who took Hoderlein's position. These witnesses supported Superintendent Andrews in his charges that meat prepared in Hoderlein's department was not fit for the consumption of people living at the Home.

Hoderlein was expected to testify in his own behalf Tuesday afternoon. The investigation began Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

Hoderlein was dismissed from his position a week ago by Superintendent Andrews, who charged that two meats prepared by Hoderlein were injurious to the health of persons eating them. Hoderlein denied this and appealed to the civil service board for reinstatement.

Hoderlein's dismissal is the only change the new superintendent has made in the Home staff of employees, since he assumed office in July.

BOYS PLAYING BALL.

OCCASIONALLY this summer some boys have played ball in the Statehouse grounds opposite the State Journal building. We are glad the caretakers did not disturb them. They did no noticeable damage to the grass and they had a good time, as did some men in the office buildings who took time out to watch them. Much that is interesting and inspiring may be seen in the picture when vigorous boyhood is busy with a game of ball. The certainty of professional playing may be absent but there is something that quickens the pulse of any red-blooded man when eager youth is watched during a great struggle to win.

The boys played indoor baseball with rules adjusted to be in harmony with conditions, numbers and surroundings. The best part of it was the boys played clean ball and played to win. They put all their ability into their playing. There was no gate money to be divided, no special honor to be won, save the honor of playing better ball than the other boys. It was juvenile but it was good. Pitcher, catcher, batter, basemen and fielders vied with one another in doing their part. It was fine exercise physically, had a good mental appeal, provided pleasure, and in playing the boys learned some important lessons.

By playing clean ball they learned honesty and gave that thought real place in their minds and hearts, and that is of the utmost importance to both boy and man. They learned that clean playing may be done without injustice to others, and that lesson is one millions of people might well learn anew and practice in life. They learned something of their relation to other boys, the rights of the other boy, the necessity for them to recognize his rights. Each boy objected if a wrong play was made of an advantage sought, therefore the rights of each boy in the group were safeguarded. They learned how to provide a portion of their own entertainment, and that is an important lesson. They learned something of sturdiness and independence, the need of working to win if a victory is sought. These and many other things they learned, even if they did not realize it, for one is continually learning important things in playing clean ball.

TWO PER CENT AMERICANS.

THE "hundred per cent. American" who goes abroad and displays his lack of breeding by belittling everything European and ranting ceaselessly of the all 'round superiority of Uncle Sam is a bore, a duffer and a nuisance. With all his silly noise, however, he does less actual harm than the other misguided product of this land of the free who goes abroad and runs down his country and becomes a mere sycophant for the purpose of winning praise and place. He assumes to speak for the United States, and as he is likely to be a man of some importance his assumption is too often taken seriously. He is the 2 per cent. American—or less.

Theodore E. Burton of Cleveland, just returned to Washington after taking the leading role at the Geneva conference for the regulation of inter-national traffic in arms and war material, hits directly and strongly when he denounces the detractors of America and calls attention to the harm they do.

Perhaps the most distressing of these self-appointed spokesmen is the American who goes abroad and declares the United States has no real intention of collecting the war debts. He speaks for no one but himself, but because he is more or less prominent in some walk of life his unauthorized statements are taken seriously, much to the detriment of the work of those who really are trying to impress on the European mind that a debt is a debt, and that the United States, though a considerate creditor, really expects to be paid.

Other Americans go to Europe and denounce all things which are typically American in either social or official life. They seek to create the impression that they are ashamed of their country; and this naturally leads to the assumption that most really significant Americans are ashamed of America.

Mr. Burton is not in any way upholding noisy and offensive brag when he denounces the equally and more dangerous American subservience which he has found so troublesome. All he suggests is that America's inferiority refrain from voicing their views under the camouflage of authoritative utterances. The rebuke is merited.

DARK DAYS

Life has laughter in it,
Smiles and songs of glee
But the care-free minute
Stays not constantly
Cares must come to vex us
Burdens we must bear,
Problems grave perplex us
As through life we fare.

Life has hours of duty,
Days of trial, too,
Ugliness and beauty
Age has wandered through;
Hills to climb and hollows
Where our feet may rest;
After pleasure, follows
Many a cruel test.

None forever dancing,
None forever sad;
Yesterday's romancing
Was a joy we had;
Now our hearts are aching

With the hurt of grief,
Shall we, God forsaking,
Falter in belief?

God was in our pleasures,
God was good to give;
In the joy He measures
God is seen to live.
Shall He then desert us
In our times of fear?
When our sorrows hurt us
Will not God draw near?

Pain and joy are blended
Ever through the years,
Life, until it's ended
Runs through smiles and tears,
And the God who gave us
Joys which slip away
Sends His love to save us
When we meet dismay.

Mrs. V. G.: "I was interested in the letter published some time ago by 'Outraged Housewife,' saying that cats are no good for catching mice. I never saw mice in the daytime and probably her cats did not either! Therefore poor Tabble must sleep all day in order to be on the lookout for them at night. Not many people can keep dogs today, because of living in apartments, but at least we can keep the cat. If 'Outraged Housewife' will diminish the cat's supper slightly and leave him a little hungry at night, I am sure her pet will become a more efficient mouser. I am a great lover of animals hence this perhaps uncalled-for comment."

Answer: I am sure your letter will interest many. This column is run for the home woman, and anything which will help her to make her home a happier or more satisfying place, is always welcome.

Anonymous: "Will you please suggest a good covering for a screen which will stand between living room and dining room?"

Answer: I think tapestry would be a good choice. Or you could use plain burlap or men's cloth. These heavy materials must, of course, be put on the screen frame plain. If you wish a gathered covering, use sunfast window drapey, silk or cretonne. Be sure you select a color, or blend of colors, which harmonizes with the wall paper and draperies of both rooms.

Miss B.: "Noting your recently published comment on the picture entitled 'Hope,' I am going to give you some information which I feel sure will interest the reader who had inquired about pictures. I once saw 'Hope,' framed with this verse printed beneath it: 'Despairing we sink beneath sorrow and care, of life and its pleasures bereft. 'Tis then we are given to know that in Heaven there's still a ray of hope left.' This explains the name."

Answer: It was good of you to take the trouble to send in this verse. It will help those who have beautified their homes with this picture to understand the Watts masterpiece better.

Amateur Collector: "I have an old-fashioned house and am trying to fill it with beautiful old furniture. Now and then I also find antique stores very rare small articles. This week I have run across two hand-wrought iron meat saws made by the first settlers in this country, but they need cleansing of some sort. How shall I go about restoring their finish?"

Answer: Do not use anything on them but floor wax. This will give them a dull, soft finish without taking away their look of antiquity.

FACTORY GIRL ONE OF THE 98

Will Answer Letters from Women Asking About Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lititz, Pa.—"I was very nervous and suffered for a long time with pains in my back and side. I was employed in a factory and for about three months I did no work at all. I am glad to say that I am one of the 98 out of 100 that it has helped. I recommend it when I can, as I know it is good for women's troubles. I will answer any letter that any woman writes to me. RAINY DAYS

Sometimes trouble comes so fast and in such liberal doses that it compels us to reorganize our entire mental machinery. And sometimes our entire life.

Like the nation that puts itself on a war basis when the dark storms of the enemy appear, a man is often called upon to face a regular battalion of emergencies. Not the occasional rainy day, but a string of rainy days.

But we have all noticed that even after the continuous rainy days, there is sure to be more freshness than ever when the clouds roll away and the sun again appears.

I looked out of my window the other day and watched the rain pour down in torrents. It was dark. Mist followed the rain. But on the morning, the sun streamed through my sleeping room and there was a crispness in the air and everything looked green and fresh. Beauty seemed to have been born anew.

Then I was glad it had rained. I remember that last summer it was hot and dry. People prayed for rain. The flower gardens were pale and sad. The grass was parched and the ground hard and baked. But this summer my garden is in full bloom and the grass is rich in its green coat. Every day I see the smiles of new flowers that have climbed a little higher toward the sun and there is a look of happiness to all nature that I have rarely seen.

Rainy days shouldn't be unhappy days. They mean too much to the sunny days.

We are apt to want the good and happy things of life to continue without break. But the wise Watcher of human beings understands better.

He sends and gives variety. He knows His world and his family.

The man who grows welcomes every test of his powers.

The rainy days move to talk to us about appreciating the sunny ones. And sometimes a whole string of them comes to wake us up!

HEADS COMPANY

JOHN H. GALLOWAY

John H. Galloway, is president and general manager of The McDowell and Torrence Lumber Company, South Detroit Street. The firm boasts one of the oldest if not the oldest, lumber yards in the state and is one of the pioneer business firms of the city. Mr. Galloway has been connected with the McDowell and Torrence Company thirty-eight years. He was formerly connected with the Cooley and Holapple grocery and started with the lumber firm as yard manager in 1886. He was elected president in 1917. During his early career he drove an express wagon when the Baltimore and Ohio was a narrow gauge railway.

ROCKS WEIGHING MANY TONS WERE MENACE DURING QUAKE FORMER XENIAN DECLARES

Mrs. Malissa Redfern of West Main Street, this city, received a letter recently from her son, Jason C. Redfern, who is employed as telegrapher at Townsend Mont., for the Northern and Pacific Railway Company, telling of narrow escapes he experienced during the earthquake which rocked California, Montana, Wyoming and other Western states.

At the time of the earthquake Mr. Redfern was employed as telegrapher at Lombard, Mont., a "hole" as he describes it in his letter, in the canyons of the Missouri river. The place is scarcely more than a shack situated along the banks of the roaring Missouri river. On three sides by steep perpendicular ledges of rock two hundred feet in height and on the other side by the river. The rail line is laid at the bottom of this pit and just above Lombard is the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul tunnel. At the station the baggage and freight is placed on elevators and hoisted to the top of the rocks, as access to the station by auto or team is utterly impossible.

A portion of his letter follows: "I was in the center of the earthquake and there seems to be something about an earthquake that is different from a flood because it seems to take the bottom out from under one. I was at Lombard where the CMSTP tunnel caved in and dammed up sixteen streams and backed the water up until it was seventy-five feet deep. Never build a brick house or if an earthquake comes all you have to do is to get out in the open and there will not be much danger as very few are injured or killed.

"Lombard is a 'hole' along the banks of the Missouri River with a wall of rock on three sides about two hundred feet high and the river making up the fourth side. Survey says that an underground lake about ten miles in length extends from Lombard to Toston.

"At 6:23 p. m., June 27, the quake struck Lombard and the roar of the mountains filling up the bowels of the earth was terrifying. I tried to get out of the office but the rolling of the quake made it impossible to walk. The office fixtures and supplies were falling and crashing all about me. At last I got hold of the door jam and pulled myself to the door. It is a good thing I was unable to walk as the falling chimneys from the depot roof would have struck me, if I had attempted to go out of doors. When looking at the mountain just west of the depot it seemed as though it must be a cyclone bringing the mountain down upon top of us as a rock weighing anywhere around one hundred tons came rolling down toward us. All the space we had was about two hundred feet between the bluffs and no chance at all on the river side so it seemed as if we were like rats in a trap. The action of the mountains settling in the bowels of the earth caused the waters of the Missouri river to leave the bed. When receding, water shot into the air hundreds of feet like a geyser and then the dust settled upon us and it seemed as though we were to be suffocated by falling stone. Great rocks had lodged in the front and rear of the trains and one passenger train had just cleared the tunnel not three minutes before the crash of the tunnel came. Rock falling onto the track just east of the office snapped the rails as if they had been matches.

"A stone weighing about fifty tons stopped about thirty feet from my 'box car' residence and that night I was uneasy about sleeping in the box car with a possible ton rock companion. Not a soul was injured or killed around here and it seems as if it were an act of Providence."

Mr. Redfern is well known in this city having been formerly employed as telegrapher for the C. H. and D. railroad here for 14 years. His wife and fifteen months old daughter Lynne Jean were in Texas and out of danger during the quake shocks. They were expected home the first of August being called to Texas by the death of Mrs. Redfern's father.

FAMOUS FRENCH RECIPES

GOURDS AU GRATIN
Paris—Gourd-time is here, and gourds make one of the best French vegetable dishes.

For gourds au gratin, choose small fresh ones. Cut each gourd into two parts, lengthwise, and make little incisions into the pulp so the heat may penetrate and assure thorough baking.

Let the gourds stand a few hours in salt water. Drain in a cloth, powder with flour and plunge into boiling fat. Let remain until both the pulp and the outside shell can be pierced with a fork.

Remove the pulp and with it prepare the filling. Add bread crumbs, soaked in milk; shallots, parsley and mushrooms, chopped and browned in butter. Mix all thoroughly and fill the gourds.

Arrange them in a buttered baking pan; sprinkle with grated cheese and pour over melted butter. Bake in oven for one-half hour.

HOBBIES OF THE GREAT AND NEAR GREAT AS TOLD BY NEWS WRITER

EDITOR'S NOTE — This is the twenty-fourth of a series of intimate sketches which reveal the national political figure as a "brother under the skin" to the man behind the power, the white collar worker or the day laborer. Others will follow.

SENATOR CHARLES McNARY
The far flung West have sent many "butter and egg" men to the white glare of the "Roaring Forties," but it has sent only one "prune and filbert" man to Congress.

He is Senator Charles L. McNary (R., of Ore.), a Republican spokesman for the West and one of the Senate's farm bloc leaders. His hobby is to manage a 200-acre fruit farm near Salem, Ore., on which he raises prunes, cherries, walnuts and filberts.

As the Senator says: "I am not the butter and egg man from the West of whom you've heard so much; I'm only the prune and filbert man from Oregon."

The Senator, noted nationally for his extraordinary power over Congressional legislation and for his wide friendship among men of public affairs, is by no means a novice at fruit raising. On the contrary he ranks as one of the greatest horticulturists in the West and a veritable Luther Burbank among the fruit raisers.

PIONEER IN INDUSTRY
So far as the filbert industry is concerned, the Senator is without a peer in the nation. Indeed, he was a pioneer at the industry, and as long ago as 1916 he wrote a pamphlet on the "Culture of Filberts," which was widely circulated among fruit farmers by the Salem (Ore.) Fruit Union.

Of his pamphlet the Fruit Union's officers said: "On account of the scarcity of literature on this subject and the fast-growing interest in this new field of horticulture, we present this pamphlet to the public in the belief that its contents may stimulate an interest in an industry destined to increase the material welfare of the Northwest country."

In connection with his prune orchard, McNary has shown amazing horticultural ability along the lines made famous by Burbank. He has taken prune trees of other brands and turned them into imperials by "top-working through grafting." To the lay mind this can be explained as growing tangerine blossoms on the branches of another tree — like getting white kittens from a black cat.

GRAFTER—OF TREES

As a horticulturist, McNary also understands the science of "grafting" trees which fail to produce their own power. He will take pollen from another tree and virtually graft the pollen to the non-producing tree, so that ultimately it turns out as large a yield as its more prolific neighbor. This is the real science of nature.

Of his hobby, McNary says:

"It is both a pleasure and a business. It requires skill, patience and hard work, and it returns the inestimable pleasure only obtained by the nature lover who works at his play."

As for recreation, when far from his orchards, the Senator plays golf and attends baseball games. On golf he explains his record thus: "I belong to the club class, with a score of 110. That makes me happy, though, for I've heard it said that a man who plays over 100 is neglecting his golf, while one who plays under 100 is neglecting his business. There's that satisfaction at least in playing over 100."

As a baseball fan, the Senator's one regret last year was that his own campaign for re-election to the Senate came at a time when Washington won a pennant and a world's championship. He waited nine years for the event and then missed the series.

Next — Senator J. Thomas Hefflin.

ALLEGED BEATER OF WIFE IS ARRESTED

John Edward Lampert, of New Jasper, alleged "wife-beater," is being held in the County Jail pending his arraignment probably Tuesday afternoon on a charge of assault and battery.

Lampert was arrested Monday night by Chief Deputy Sheriff John Baughn and Deputy George Spencer at his home. He was sleeping and the officers tumbled him out of bed.

Lampert is alleged to have pummelled his wife with his fists during a family quarrel Monday night and driven her from their home. Mrs. Lampert is recuperating at the home of a neighbor.

"I HAVE TO REPORT"

Official Correspondence Reveals Thrilling Story of Rescue of Crew of American Submarine Driven Ashore in Storm Off Portsmouth, N. H.

"I HAVE TO REPORT"
Lieutenant-Commander Stewart E. Bray is speaking; Lieutenant-Commander Bray of an American submarine—the S-48—which not so long ago grounded one stormy night off Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and for twelve hours lay helpless under the relentless pounding of tempestuous seas.

"I have to report..."
The files of the Navy Department contain innumerable documents beginning just that way—in the formal phraseology which has endured for a century and a half. Each tells a story of fortitude, of courage, of high resolve in the face of danger.

Of such a calibre is this latest document, thumbed from reading by many bureau chiefs—captains and rear-admirals—and now made public. It is a dramatic story unfolded without superlatives; a typical naval report, detailed and exact, but with color and atmosphere, those necessary adjuncts to a sea yarn, left solely to the imagination of the reader.

Two Officers on Board
"I have to report," begins Lieutenant-Commander Bray, "that the vessel under my command grounded off Jaffrey Point at the entrance to the harbor of Portsmouth, N. H. The commanding officer was coming at the time of grounding, being assisted by the only other officer on board, Lieutenant (jg) P. P. Spaulding, USNR, who was completing his two weeks' annual tour of duty on the S-48."

Only two officers on board and one of these a naval reservist, who, the report later states, "showed himself as possessing coolness and courage amidst more or less unfamiliar surroundings." A nice tribute that to Lieutenant Spaulding, a civilian from Worcester, Mass., on temporary duty.

The Submarine Grounds
As she neared the Whaleback Light, which twinkles at the mouth of Portsmouth Harbor, the S-48 was running through a heavy snow, the tide was ebbing and a strong wind was blowing from the northeast. With the port propeller shaft bent, the submarine had but one engine available and was making about three knots. Snow had clogged the azimuth instrument and was beating into the eyes of Lieutenant-Commander Bray. Accurate bearings were impossible, but such reckonings which could be made convinced the commander that to clear the shoal, which sticks out just to the north of the Whaleback, the course must be changed. The starboard motor had been stopped. With the decision to change course to the left it was started, and a minute later the submarine was felt to ground. Reckonings had been in error, and the S-48, instead of passing into the channel, had slid its nose upon the rocky shoal at the southern entrance of the harbor.

Tugs Unable to Help
The report tells how they sent a radio message to the navy yard off their plight and asked for help, and how, despite every effort to help, the submarine remained firmly perched on the rocks. Two tugs appeared about an hour and three-quarters after the grounding. The S-48, by means of its searchlight, signalled them the position and the depth of water around the ship. The tugs took up a position 200 to 300 yards astern, remained there for fifteen minutes and then departed into the night. The S-48 could not understand it.

Lieutenant J. P. Compton, one of the tugs, the James Woolley, explained afterwards that weather conditions would not permit the tugs to approach nearer and they had no boats to carry a line. One of the tugs, therefore, returned to the naval station and the other started a search for a lifeboat.

To return to the report; the sea by this time was beginning to grow wilder and another attempt was made to back off.

"This attempt was unsuccessful," Lieutenant-Commander Bray states. "However, the bow of the vessel shortly after played off to the right until the head was about ten degrees. Knowing the ship's position aground and since the seas were making there remained but one way open to the Commanding Officer to get the ship off, and that was to go ahead on the starboard engine since the storage battery would not carry the load at this time. Accordingly this engine was started, but only because the ship took a decided list and started to roll. After stopping the engine the vessel still listed to starboard at quite a steep angle and the head commenced to swing to port, due to the mounting sea."

From this point on the dangers in the submersible grew by alarming proportions. First of all, the commander ordered all water tight doors closed below decks and sent the crew to the deck with lifebelts or mattresses. Within a few minutes, however, the waves were smashing across the deck, threatening to carry the men overboard. All but five were then ordered below and these five, with the two officers, remained on the bridge to battle with the elements.

"The seas now started to come clean over the S-48," the report reads, "and before the conning tower hatch could be closed four or five tons of water had found its way into the control room. The ship at this time was rolling about fifteen degrees to port to sixty degrees or seventy degrees to starboard, and it was all that those on the bridge could do to hold on. This violent rolling lasted for about thirty minutes when it started to subside."

Troubles Below Deck
At 2:30 in the morning Lieutenant-Commander Bray went below to get warm. He had been on the bridge since the grounding, seven hours earlier. Within the next hour troubles piled up galore. The pump room was half full of water which could not be pumped out. The battery room door was dogged shut, but the blowers were still running, discharging into the engine room. Footing could hardly be maintained because of the heavy list. Fear of chlorine gas prevented the opening of the battery room door and the securing of dry clothing and the ship's records. Then at 3:30 the pilot light of the battery blowers went out and the ship's lights began to grow dim. They knew there was water in the battery room, but the danger of starting rivets and seams prevented any effort to blow out the flooded compartments. So the voice tube and the battery discharge from the engine room were closed.

The most feared odor on a submarine—that of chlorine gas—began to be perceptible about 4 a. m. To freshen the air, the main induction was opened and the engine induction cracked slightly, with a man stationed there to close it in an emergency. The men were by this time suffering intensely with the cold, and to add to the dangers a new discharge of chlorine gas began to permeate the air, coming from the batteries used for radio. Added to this the last three lights, which had been giving the faintest of rays, suddenly went dark. At 5 o'clock water was discovered seeping over the coming of the battery room door. The leak was stopped and then a hail above announced a searchlight playing on the ship.

Efforts at Rescue
Behind the searchlight's appearance lies another story. The shore had located the S-48 on the shoal off the furthest breakwater beyond Jaffrey Point, and Lieutenants C. Shugg and J. P. Compton, the latter just back from the tug, had gone overland to Fort Stark, the nearest point to the endangered submarine. The Wallis Sands life saving crew, with gun and breeches buoy, were hurried along by tractor to the same destination. Just as the crew arrived, watchers at Fort Stark reported that the S-48 had disappeared from the breakwater.

"Anchor lights and a port running light were then made out dimly inside Little Harbor," Lieutenant Shugg reports. "Visibility was extremely poor. The lights seemed to recede for some time and then went out suddenly."

Suspense on Shore
Was it the S-48? If it was, it meant that the submarine had drifted or had been dashed around two breakwaters and into the harbor. And should it prove to be the S-48, had the gallant crew survived this new disaster? There was one way to find out. Fort Stark had a searchlight. It was out of commission, but men rushed across from Fort Constitution to rig it up. Experts in light handling arrived at 3 o'clock in the morning and in less than an hour the searchlight was in operation.

Its beams swept in and out through Little Harbor, and finally out in the middle of the expanse of water they picked up the dark hull of the S-48. It was too far off for the searchlight to do more than disclose the vague bulk of the submarine. But what was that? A momentary flashing light from out in the harbor; then another; spaced and methodical.

Flashlight Signals
Lieutenant Compton leaped forward. "They're signalling with a flashlight," he exclaimed. "Wait. I can't read the code."

The officer on shore was right. Lieutenant-Commander Bray, the chlorine gas having become almost deadly, had marshalled his entire crew on deck and with a small pocket flashlight was signalling insistently for the dispatch of a lifeboat.

The rest is soon told. The first lifeboat arrived at 7:30 and took off five men; more trips and another boat soon accounted for the rest, and Lieutenant-Commander Bray, the last to leave the ship, was on shore by 9 o'clock.

Not a life had been lost, but eight men were sent to the hospital at the Portsmouth Navy Yard suffering from exposure, and two of these had sustained other injuries, the one bruised and the other a fractured jaw. Numbered in the eight were both officers, but Lieutenant-Commander Bray, before yielding to any medical treatment, insisted upon going back to the S-48 in a naval tug and superintending the laying of an anchor astern of her.

EXPERT WORKMANSHIP AND BEST MATERIALS CONTRIBUTED TO NEW HOME BEAUTIFUL HERE

The Evening Gazette and The Morning Republican "Home Beautiful" on North Detroit Street, which will be visited by thousands during the public opening this week, is built of frame construction, shingle roof, siding exterior, brick base course, brick chimney and brick front steps.

The house was built by the McDowell and Torrence Lumber Company, veteran Xenia business firm and one of the oldest lumber companies in the state. The master craftsman employed by the McDowell and Torrence Company sided the house with Velsco, a new cane fibre wall board, an insulator against heat or cold. The Celotex material is covered with three-fourth by eight redwood lathe siding.

The front porch embraces the front of the residence and attention is attracted to the structure by a large brick chimney, centering the porch and running the height of the house. The chimney forms the attractive fireplace in the living room.

There is a quaint recess in the living room, where a davenport or desk can be placed. An attractive feature to the home-lover is the built-in buffet in the dining room, and the built-in cabinets in the kitchen.

The "Home Beautiful" is floored throughout with oak. In the bedrooms the walls are stippled-painted on the plaster finish, the work of A. W. Black, expert Xenia painter. Each of the bedrooms are comfortably large with roomy closets.

The garage is located in the basement. Here, too, is the Duro pump and water-softener, installed by John A. North, one of Xenia's best known business men. The furnace was installed by the C. C. Henrie Shop, which also handled the tinning contract on the house.

COUNTY RECEIVES $6,500 FROM STATE AS GAS TAX SHARE

A check for $6,500 was received in the county auditor's office Monday as Greene County's share of the first state-wide distribution of the gasoline tax receipts since the law became effective in April. It is announced by Auditor R. O. Wead.

Greene County's share is equal to the amount received by the other counties in the state and is to be placed in the county road fund and used exclusively for road improvement and maintenance. The $6,500 represents the county's share of the collection during the months of April, May and June.

Twenty-five percent of the total collection is divided equally among the eighty-eight counties, forty-five percent goes to the state highway department for road maintenance while the remaining thirty percent reverts to each municipality at the rate of seventy-eight cents per auto in proportion to the number of machines registered from each city.

Xenia City's share has been apportioned but the amount has not been received.

Small counties and large cities are benefited by the gas tax collection. Despite its size or number of registered autos, each county receives an equal share of the tax. The large cities also get a big rake-off in proportion to the motor population.

ATTRACTIVE ROOMS INVITING FEATURE OF HOME BEAUTIFUL

Within The Evening Gazette and The Morning Republican "Home Beautiful" which will be opened to the public, Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, 253 North Detroit Street, the rooms come up to the inviting, comfortable atmosphere suggested by the outside appearance.

The living room is eleven feet by twenty-one feet, six inches, with a finely proportioned fireplace of brick, topped with a real Colonial mantel. Across from the fireplace is an alcove eight feet long with lights on either side, just the right place for piano, bookcases and cushioned davenport.

Opening out of the living room is the spacious porch, nine feet, six inches, by nineteen feet, six inches. French doors lead from the living room to the porch. The dining room, kitchen and back entry arrangements is most convenient. A built-in buffet is placed under the three casement window in the dining room.

In the kitchen both sink and worktable have well lighted positions under the window. The cabinet and cupboards are built-in, and there is a brook closet for the refrigerator in the rear entry.

There is a basement under the entire house, divided into a large well-lighted laundry, heater and fuel rooms and garage.

The bedroom layout also shows every attention has been paid to convenience and comfort. Every sleeping room has windows on two sides to make them light, cheerful and healthful.

The closets are unusually deep and there is on the second floor in addition to a closet in each bedroom a large linen closet in the hall and medicine cabinet in the bathroom.

DECLARE NICKOL IS FALSIFYING ABOUT DAYTON BANK THEFT

Portions of the confession of Fred C. Nickol, Dayton manufacturer, that he robbed the North Dayton bank a few weeks ago, were branded as deliberate lies, by Walter E. McGervey, former Xenia, president of the Dayton Saving and Trust Company, Tuesday.

"Nickol's story that he entered the bank so early through an open door is a deliberate lie," McGervey said. "We have found a man who swears that Nickol was shaved downtown at 7 o'clock on the morning of the robbery."

It is believed that Nickol stole a key from the effects of his niece, who lives at his home and who is an employee of the bank, declares that he made under cross-examination Tuesday which reveal discrepancies may lead to the implication of others in the robbery, it is said.

Nickol was arraigned in criminal court Tuesday morning and pleaded "not guilty" to the charge of robbery and wined as he heard Judge W. N. Ham G. Powell fix bail at $50,000.

Nickol was arrested by detectives Monday after being trailed for a week. He told a story of business reverses and the frantic need of money.

"NOT POSSIBLE TO CLASSIFY"

BY MACK SAUER

Xenia, Ohio, August 25.—A few jottings of the day by Samuel Peypys Jr.:—Up very betimes and to talking with the milkman about sights he sees when going around in the early morning, pretty funny, too much paths, too, about homes where there are sick and the like. Talked with a colored laborer about music and playing with carnivals, of which he has had much experience.

For a stroll along Main Street, meeting with an imudent jade who crowded me off the sidewalk, nearly. Dined plentifully and after some discourse on the condition of our cellar, that is about the cans of fruits, berries and the like, and find we in good fix tho no older to drink for which I might be sorry.

Talked with a lady who does well painting pictures and whose husband has taught school in this country for many years.

In the evening in my porch swing to read, but who should come, but my fat beauty to sell me tomatoes from the farm, and a joyful moment it was to see her again, for tho we have been at daggers since the eggs I got from her were not fresh, now no greater friends in all the world and I did buy from her with much grace. Joshed a bit with her about Jack Dempsey, the prize fighter and wondered whether she could whip him or not.

Got to wondering if not again time for fanatics to declare the world to be at an end, and to set the day at which it shall come, as they are often up to.

Took a plunge in hot water and after a few verses from an old reader, to bed with prayers.

BRITONS ARE LOSING THEIR BACKBONE IS CLAIM OF NOVELIST

Bournemouth, Eng., Aug. 25.—"Britons are losing their toughness," says Francis Mitchell Hedges, famous explorer and author.

He believes that the pioneer spirit in Britain has deteriorated and that the community as a whole has become "soft."

"The reasons for my conclusion," says Hedges, "are based on the changed social habits of the people. The tolerance with which men now submit to petty restrictions is a clear evidence of their loss of toughness."

"I was at a public dance the other evening. There I saw men guests accept without protest refusals at the refreshment buffet to supply them with tobacco or cigarettes after eight o'clock, or a drink after ten o'clock, but they seemed quite happy when small boys in fancy uniforms came round and served them with chocolates and tawdry toys."

"The want of 'stiffening' has even spread to the young people and an entirely different breed of boy is being produced today that of 15 or 20 years ago."

CALLS BOYS EFFEMINATE

"I have been particularly struck by the bearing of the boys who arrived home in London for the school vacations. They comported themselves more like 'little ladies' than natural youths, for no young woman could have behaved 'more nicely' than these lads."

"My explorations have showed me that the downfall of many civilization followed the course being shaped in Britain today—the deterioration of the men corresponding with the predominance of the women."

"The trend today is just what it is among such degenerate tribes as the Chucunague Indians, the men of whom have no choice in anything, not even in the selection of a wife or in the form of the marriage service, throughout which they are not allowed to say a word."

"In closely cropping her hair, the modern woman is simply aping the manner of her degenerate sisters in the Darien district of Panama, and by wearing less and less clothing is again only following the example of fallen peoples."

ASSAILS JAZZ

"The excessive craze for dancing, and the popularity of the tom-tom and the jazz band are further borrowings from people far down in the mental scale."

"It is urgently necessary that the British man should realize that by nature he is the leader, and refuse longer to be governed or dominated by women."

But unfortunately for Mitchell Hedges no one in Britain will take him seriously on any subject.

OPEN HUNTING FOR ALL OVER OHIO IS PROMISE OF FUTURE

Columbus, O., Aug. 25.—Here's good news for Ohio nimrods.

State game officials today voiced belief that there are no indications that the time will come when any section of the Buckeye state will be closed against hunters during hunting seasons.

This optimistic outlook was revealed when attention of these state officials was directed to the information that hunting of certain game has been banned in some counties of Pennsylvania.

D. O. Thompson, chief of the state division of fish and game, today expressed the opinion that operation of the game refuge system throughout the state will never create such a situation from arising in Ohio.

Thompson pointed out that in 78 of Ohio's 88 counties the state has charge of game refuges, or preserves, varying in size from 1,000 to 3,000 acres of land, where game is being propagated. From these places, squirrel, rabbit, and pheasant issue from time to time and are added to the supply of game available for Ohio hunters.

It is expected to have similar refuges operating in the remaining ten counties of the state soon, Thompson said. No hunting is permitted on these refuges.

Although Buckeye state hunters now are limited to the killing of squirrel, rabbit and Pheasant, Thompson said the state plans to begin the propagation this fall of Hungarian partridge and rough grouse on the state preserve, and, later, adding them to the list of game that hunters may kill.

AGE OF SARDINES NOW DETERMINED BY NEW SOLUTION

Los Angeles, Aug. 25.—Science has dealt a fearful blow to the matrons and misses of the sardine family.

No longer will Madame Sardine be able to ... about her fine and keep the great family of fishes ignorant of just how many Summers have passed since she first flicked the waters of the broad Pacific.

After years of study California scientists have discovered a method which reveals the age of sardines.

At the State Fish Commission laboratory at Los Angeles Harbor piscatologists have perfected a solution which, when applied to a sardine, brings out the rings of the scales so clearly they may be counted and the age of the fish ascertained.

In most of the fish families the ear bone rings or scale rings usually tell the age to the naked eye, but this is not true of the sardine.

TO AID INDUSTRY

Discovery of a solution which reveals the sardine's age is expected to prove of great benefit to the fishing industry, and it will prevent hauling in of large quantities of sardines of spawning age.

Miss Ruth Miller, a student of the University of California, southern branch, Los Angeles, is in charge of the experimental work conducted in connection with the sardine age solution. She is undoubtedly the best informed woman in the world on the subject of sardines.

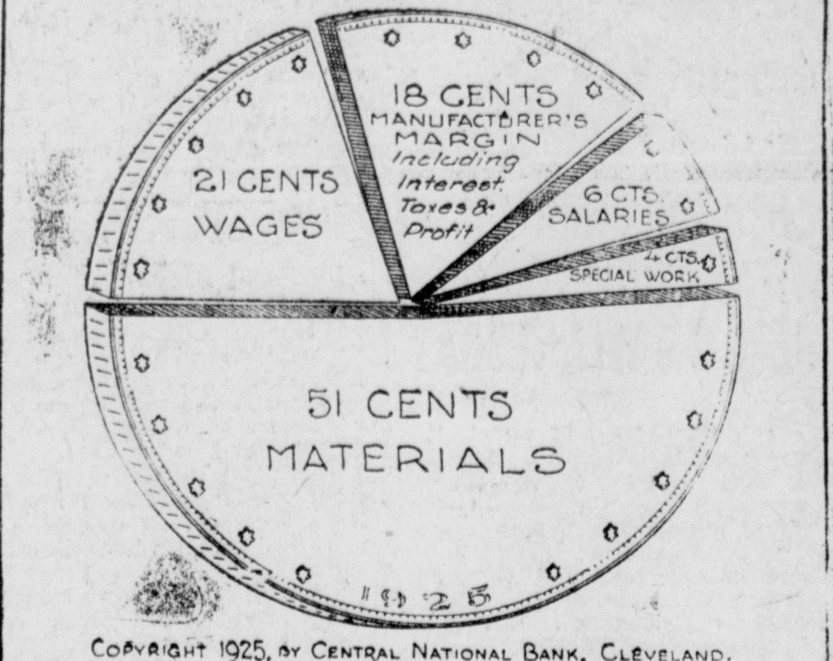

The strange-colored fishes of the waters off Hawaii have been duplicated in a mysterious fish with a green-yellow body, bright lemon-yellow

GARMENT MAKERS OPERATE ON 18 PER CT.

OHIO CLOTHING MAKER'S DOLLAR
How it is Apportioned Among Costs of Operation of The Manufacturer is Shown By Data of U.S. Census Bureau

Manufacturers of clothing in Ohio operate at a margin averaging eighteen cents on each dollar received for product. This includes interest on investment, taxes and overhead as well as profit.

These data are taken from a study of the clothing manufacturing industry in Ohio made by the U. S. Census Bureau. The Bureau received reports showing the cost of operation of all Ohio plants as reported in the form prescribed by the Bureau.

Of the dollar received by the manufacturer, an average of twenty-one cents or a proportion larger than his margin is passed along to his employees in the form of wages. Salaried workers low fine and a purplish tail caught in the Pacific off the Mexican border. The fish was brought to the State Fish Commission laboratory here by men on the purse seiner Unity, and its like is reported never to have been seen before by either experts or fishermen.

An exhaustive search has been made by William Harrington and Joseph Craig, of the State laboratory, through volumes devoted to the life histories of the fish families, but no description checking with that of the lemon-colored fish from the Pacific has been found.

The fish most closely resembling the strangely-colored specimen is the button perch, but Los Angeles authorities said they do not believe the lemon-yellow fish is from that family.

The specimen has been preserved and will be sent to Stanford University, California, for classification by Dr. F. C. Stark, a noted authority on California fish.

CROP A RECORD ONE

The sardine crop in this district for the season just closing totaled more than 20,000,000 pounds. This was said to have established a new California record and is reported a world's record for any single district.

According to the State Commission, sardines along the California and Mexican coast are becoming more plentiful each year and the fields will shortly, it is predicted, become leaders on the globe.

Because of fair weather prevailing off the coast in this section, fishing operations may be continued without interruption and because of the fact that fishermen have been attracted here in large numbers during recent years.

DENIES GETTYSBURG SPEECH IMPROMPTU EFFORT AS REPORTED

Hanover, Pa., August 25.—Lincoln wrote his famous Gettysburg address in the White House and not on a train en route to Gettysburg, as is generally believed according to George R. Prowell, curator of the County Historical Society, who lives here.

Prowell told International News Service that he learned of this from the late Joseph Holt, once Judge Advocate General of the War Department, who was probably closer to Lincoln than any other person in Washington.

Prowell said: "In 1892 Judge Holt told me that Lincoln read to him a draft of his speech in the White House about ten days before he went to Gettysburg. 'No careful student of language and literature,' said Judge Holt to me, 'could be made to believe that Lincoln's speech at Gettysburg was an impromptu effort. It contained the whole philosophy of the war, and was prepared after long and careful thought.'"

To support his claim that the speech was not written on the train, Prowell added that as far back as 1890 he talked with a score of persons who rode in the same car with Lincoln from Washington to Gettysburg. None of them saw Lincoln prepare his speech by writing it on the back of an envelope.

"That story is pure fiction," declared a New York weekly paper about 1883, and even to the present time is repeated as being true."

Paxton Bigham, now living in Chambersburg, Pa., at the age of eighty-six, guarded the door of the room in which Lincoln slept at Gettysburg on the night of November 17, 1863. Recently he told Prowell that during the night he saw President Lincoln writing before he retired. Lincoln seemed to be copying his speech to be delivered next day.

Prowell also declares the car used by Lincoln on this trip, which was recently reported found in Baltimore,

MICHAEL'S MARRIAGE

By MICHAEL

CHAPTER 131

The first glimpse of New York! Is there in the whole world any sight more thrilling? New York, from a ferry chugging across the river from the New Jersey terminals of trains that end their labors there, instead of clubbing romance over the head by diving down under the river into Manhattan proper: skyscrapers dissecting the sunshine into a thousand triangles, smoke, liners putting out to sea, the color of the greatest city. London, Paris, Vienna, Buenos Aires — none of these can compare with New York.

Lilah Menlow stood, quivering by Michael's arm, with the chill winds blowing in from the ocean making her teeth dance, and drinking deep of the glorious sight of New York's skyline. The New York that she had always thought of as far away, unattainable, lay stretched before her. She was too affected to speak. Even Michael, to whom this was no new sight, although he usually entered Manhattan via the tubes, was moved.

"It's a grand sight, isn't it?" How inane his words were, he thought.

They went by taxi to a hotel only a few steps from Broadway and 42nd street.

"I'm going to begin my tour right away," Michael announced, when they were settled in their room. "I'll probably be gone three or four hours. If I'm not back by two o'clock, and you're hungry, go downstairs to the dining room and get some lunch. You ought to lie down now, and rest."

"I wish you weren't going to leave me."

"I'm sorry I have to, dear, but you understand that I can't take you with me. I'll come back just as soon as I can. Goodbye, dear," a ceremonious kiss, and he was gone.

She felt suddenly bereft. Alone in a great city! She smiled as she remembered this title of a cheap novel she had once read.

The business of unpacking their bags and laying them neatly in the drawers of the dresser and chiffoniere done, she changed into a light lounging robe, and cleaned the "train dirt" from her skin. She couldn't think of lying down and getting that rest Michael thought she needed. She was too excited. She went to the window and looked out. From the tenth floor, at an angle, she could see the Times Building, and some of the seething mass below it. She shivered at the thought of being in that mass alone. How did people get around in New York, any way? The never-ending procession of automobiles, trucks, people. Where were they all going, and when were they all going? Here, surely, was the crossroads of the world.

Her imagination captured her. Down the street she could see the electric signs of numerous theatres, now, of course, gleaming only with sunshine. She smiled at the resolves she had made when younger to go on the stage and become a great actress. Now she could see L-I-I-A-H P-H-A-R-L-E-Y written on these electric globes below. No, not Lilah Phareley. She wouldn't use that name on the stage; Lilah Lovely, or Louise Looms, would be better.

After all, he was tired, she decided. She relaxed on one of the twin beds. The noise grew fainter. Sleep.

She awakened slowly, thinking she was at home. Then the strangeness of the surroundings caused her eyes to fly open with a start. The rumble coming up from the street below awakened her brain. She jumped up. It must be late. There was no clock in the room. She strained her eyes at the window, endeavoring to see a "fendly timepiece. Then she remembered, and went to the telephone. The operator blurred her vowels and gave the time as "It's 3:15 o'clock."

Three, fifteen, and Michael wasn't back yet! He had been gone since 10 in the morning. And he hadn't even tried to call. A half hour she waited, then an hour. Another half hour. Her nerves began to grate. Surely something must have happened to him. He had been knocked down, probably killed. Oh! she began to cry. "What am I to do?" Again she went to the window. (To be continued.)

had been destroyed. At least thirty persons are living in Hanover who saw the Lincoln train go through here to Gettysburg. All declare Lincoln occupied the last car. According to employees who worked in the railway shops here after the war, the car was nearly worn out in 1882 and was knocked to pieces a few years later.

210 Reasons for Smiling

OLD man grouch can't shake you out of your good nature from October to May—(210 days)—if your home is equipped with the FarQuar Heating and Ventilating System. The only time you'll know it's there will be when you do the once-a-day firing! And even if you should happen to forget occasionally, your fire won't die out, for the FarQuar has been known to hold a fire seventy-two hours.

But best of all is the pure, fresh invigorating air, entirely free from dust, soot, furnace gases, etc., which is continually circulating throughout every room in the house. And then when you realize how little fuel you have burned all winter, and the delightfully refreshing atmosphere you have enjoyed, to say nothing of the benefit of an automatically controlled furnace, it will be easy for you to smile and say, with thousands of others—

"The FarQuar delivers results impossible with any other heating system."

Better come in and get additional facts before another winter catches you.
